How to Treat the Prince.

The absorbing question of the present time is how to entertain the Prince, who is now on the soil of the United States, and will be here this week, on his way East. The political canvass is for the time overshadowed, and the dissolution of the Union, the wreck of empires and the crash of worlds, which hang on, are postponed for the Prince's visit. President Buchanan has ceased his weeping over the political depravity which uses money to carry elections, and is furnishing up the White House for the Prince's reception, at which only James Gordon Bennett and family, and a few others of the (will-milk) cream of the elite of the land are to be admitted. The editor of the Atlantic (Ga.) Conference, has postponed his job of "paying Pennsylvania-avenue ten fathoms deep with dead bodies," until after the Prince's visit, as this would seriously discommode his entry into the White House. Governor Wise is to be sent off in a long, low, black, rakish steamer—such as belonged to the cruise of the Banks, to capture the Cunarder that carried off Fred Douglas—to explore the Virginia "oyster fundum," ostensibly to calculate its increase, with a view to poll-tax to pay the interest on the Virginia debt, but really to keep him out of the way, lest the sight of the Prince should throw him into one of his blood-thirsty fits. Brutus A. Pryor has been beaten into a jack-knife the dagger which he proposed to plunge into the vitals of any Republican President who should trample on the rights of the South—rights which, like the canaille, the more they are trampled upon, the better they seem to flourish—and now he is capering nimbly before an amorous looking-glass, to the lascivious pleasing of the lute, to practice his paces for the only entertainment which pleases the Prince. The South has laid aside political melodrama, which aops full of horrors in every public performance, and has smoothed its wrinkled front, and is now on hospitable thoughts intent. Surely this must be the instinct which Sir John Falstaff describes, which ever recognizes a Prince. "Even the lion will not turn on a true Prince." The approach of the Prince hushes the contest which was supposed to have brought our country into the throes of dissolution, and cuts off the daily food of threatened horrors, bloodshed and civil war which is now required to carry on the triumphant experiment of self-government.

But these piping times of peace are not free from anxiety. The question is, how shall the Prince be entertained? It was discovered on his first arrival that he was fond of dancing. This is not a very strange passion in a young man of eighteen, and in any other young man would be considered rather as a subject for reprobation. But this seems to have settled the point that the Prince has come to America to attend a round of dancing parties. A self-constituted committee of New York gentlemen, representing the wealth and high-prized piety of that city, waited upon the Prince at Montreal, and as humbly as they were to the court-funkey manner, supplanted him to accept a ball, promising that the vulgar, and especially the New York Aldermen, should be excluded. This affair is now absorbing the attention of that great metropolis.

In the first place, several high-priced clergymen appear in the list of managers. Some of the wickedest of this, and some of the righteous wince. But the Prince is not only the future temporal ruler of Great Britain, but the future Head of the English Church, which is the bulwark of Protestantism; and if the Head of the Church dances, can it be wicked for his subordinate officers and members to do likewise? On the contrary, does not his sanctified dancing make it a holy ordinance? This is not our reasoning, but that of the New York Christians.

But this question, momentous as it is, is eclipsed by another, and that is, who shall dance with the Prince? As he can not dance with the ladies, what ladies shall have the honor of having touched the hand of a Prince, to transmit to posterity, and to be commemorated in all the family pictures? It is the founding of an order of nobility in America. Who, of the coming generation of Americans, shall be permitted to exhibit to the future admiring vulgar a portrait of his mother, or his grandmother, or his great-grandmother's fourth cousin, dancing with the Prince of Wales, afterward King, and to transmit this to posterity as a perpetual patent of nobility?

It has been suggested in the New York papers that the President's niece would be the only proper person in America for the Prince to open the ball with. To this, some who have not acquired proper regard for Democratic rank, object. The question is as important as that which once divided the Little-Enders and the Big-Enders in Lilliput, and threatens as much controversy.

In this city we also have our tribulations. Our City Council instructed the Mayor to invite the Prince to enjoy our hospitality; and, although his governor declined them, probably because he did not know their nature and had fears for the personal safety of his ward; yet, as he is coming here, something must be done, and our people don't know exactly what. Now, it seems to us that the way is perfectly plain. It is supposed that when the Prince is not eating or sleeping he must be dancing. Mr. Pike has provided for that in his magnificent Opera-house. But if the Council wish to do the thing on a scale commensurate with the importance of our city, let them assume this ball at the city's cost, and then take all the tickets for distribution among their friends, after the New York plan. Let them, also, take the Burnet House during the Prince's stay, and keep an open table for themselves and their friends at the city's expense, with sparkling Catawba and cigars ad libitum. This is the only way to dispense municipal hospitality.

But if it is to be done at private cost, the merchants, and mayoral reception of the Toledo excursionists is the model. Let some good palaverer man be deputized to proceed with the Mayor and the city police in uniform, to the depot, to receive the distinguished visitors with speeches, as on that memorable occasion, with the police to prevent the escape of the crowd, impressing the unsophisticated with the idea that they were about to be taken to prison, and as eloquence costs nothing, let the welcome be warm and hearty, regardless of expense! Let them, as on that hospitable evening, be welcomed to our hotels (at $2 a day), our "infant manufactories," our workshops, our stone-quarries, our public buildings, our street cars, (duly remembering the per-capita), and our streets, mindful that if they are out at unadvised hours, or not properly attended, or "can not give a satisfactory account of themselves," they will be constrained to accept our city hospitality for thirty days, and to contribute to the municipal revenues.

The Per-Capita With Its Brains Out.
If we may judge by the arguments offered in the City Council in favor of the poll-tax on the passengers of the street cars, its defense must be about exhausted. We hear of the sacredness of contracts, as if the parties to a contract had not the right to modify it, and as if a poll-tax must be imposed on our citizens forever because an ordinance of the Council is superior to the Council. This attempt to set up the bond against the interest and rights of our own citizens, is playing "Shylock" at the expense of our own flesh. Besides, the member who was most exercised on the sanctity of this contract, professed his willingness to release the companies from that part of the contract which requires them to pave the streets. That is a fast and loose sanctity.

But the most fearful argument seems to be the effect which voting for the release of the people from the per-capita, will have on the members when they come before the people, as if the voters were going to rush to the polls and insist on being poll-taxed, and popular vengeance would fall on any member who prevented. When the contingencies of a re-election are urged in the Council, to govern the action of members, it is time to inquire what there is in the position that makes a re-election the first consideration in deliberating public questions. When a member goes outside the merits of a question, and is influenced by personal considerations, it is time for a change. Besides, since when have the people become incompetent to judge of public measures, that Councilmen talk as they must go contrary to their own honest judgment, for fear that the people can not judge as wisely?

The progress of the discussion has relieved the question from the mass of folly which was at first heaped upon it, and we find it argued in Council upon its real merits, and a member advocating the per-capita as a poll-tax, and insisting that men who have no property should be made to contribute to the public revenue in this poll-tax. This puts the question in its true shape, the only thing that was necessary at any time to dispose of every argument against the repeal of this imposition, as it has now done. The people may reasonably expect that soon they will have the right to use their own streets, and then, by the kind but reluctant permission of their own Council, they will have this convenience, which is now almost as indispensable as the highways themselves, at lower fares than in any other city in the Union.

The Ball to the Prince at Pike's Opera-House.

We are enabled to state positively that the Prince of Wales has accepted an invitation to ball at Pike's Opera-house, on next Saturday night. The ladies will prepare their minds accordingly. The Committee of Arrangement will be announced soon, and will consist of seventy or eighty gentlemen. This is the only invitation to any public entertainment that the Prince has accepted in the United States, except the ball at the Academy of Music, New York; and it is doubtless due to the reputation of high civilization which Cincinnati enjoys at the Court of St. James. We are not informed whether any plan has yet been proposed for selecting the ladies who are to honor the Prince by dancing with him. As it is impossible that all can discharge this duty, some means of assorting will have to be devised; but, we presume, the combined wisdom of the Committee of Arrangement will be equal to the emergency.

The Prince will arrive in this city on Friday night, too late for any public demonstration, as like other mortals, he has to sleep. The next day will be devoted to visiting our most attractive institutions, including the City Prison, and a ride to Brighton on our street-railroads, scrupulously paying his per-capita to the city for that privilege. Then he will receive some of our most distinguished citizens at the Burnet House. Our citizens being all distinguished, this reception can only be partial, including, probably, the Mayor, Police, Councilmen, Chamber of Commerce, Whiskey-merchants and the new Inspectors, and, first and foremost, the members of the press. In the evening he will attend the ball early, so as to turn off as many partners as possible before twelve o'clock, precisely at which time the gas will be turned off at the Opera-house, out of regard for the Sabbath.

An Ohio Book in an English Critical Journal.

The London Athenaeum has a favorable notice of Judge Nash's book, Morality and the State, which was published about a year ago by Pollett, Foster & Co., Columbus, Ohio.

THE LADIES of this city are informed by the Commercial that "the Prince has, in Canada, treated the ladies who have danced with him in a very cavalier manner, and using them as mere dancing-machines, and dismissing them at the close of a quadrille with a nod." We hope that none of our Cincinnati ladies will allow themselves to be used as dancing-machines, or dismissed with a nod. Every one of our ladies is a sovereign in her own right, and is meant for a King, let alone a Prince. The same paper says, "in the United States, however, he is not Prince of Wales, but Lord Renfrew, and etiquette will require him to treat the American ladies with more consideration." We hope our ladies will stand up for their dignity. Whatever honor it may be to dance with a future King, it will be much more glorious to snub him.

MONETARY REQUEST FROM A TROUBLED CITIZEN.—A German who was obliged to remove from Dover-street, while the street was being graded and repaired, has asked the city government to do the following things: To reimburse him for the cost of removing to Roxbury; to pay the fare of his Boston music teacher to Roxbury and back; to pay his horse-railway tolls to Boston and back; to pay for his city dinners on those days when he has not had time to go home; to pay for extra shoes worn by his children in the streets of Roxbury; to pay a doctor for attending his children, who had been made sick by eating green apples, which sick-ness could not have been overcome had they remained in Dover-street.

Particulars of the Last Great Fire at New Orleans—Men Buried Beneath the Ruins by an Explosion—Heartrending Scenes.
Saturday's New Orleans Picayune gives these particulars of the disaster in that city. Last night, about the closing of the eighth o'clock fire broke out in Karstendiek & Co.'s large oil warehouse, Nos. 101 and 103 Tchoupitoulas-street, between Lafayette and Girod-streets, running back to Foucher-street. It originated, and from what cause, we have had no possibility of ascertaining, amidst the dreadful excitement produced by the appalling calamity which ensued.

The two warehouses, four stories high, filled with liquor, were soon in flames from the ground-floor to the roof, and explosions followed explosions as the fire reached new tiers of whiskey, or brandy. The burning buildings were bounded at the corner of Lafayette-street by Evans's warehouse, a three-story building, lavishly filled with flour, whiskey, and other goods belonging to different firms, and on the upper side by the store of Messrs. Bredow & Wursthoff, wholesale grocers. There was no immediate danger to Evans's warehouse from the fact of the building being much lower than the burning one, but the owners of the goods on storage and the insurance agents employed a gang of men to roll out the goods. Meanwhile the efforts of the firemen were mainly directed to Bredow & Wursthoff's and to the warehouse on the opposite side of Foucher-street. Many of the firemen occupied the upper part and roof of the corner warehouse (Evans's). The fire reached the Court, and on the corner of Main to Fifth, East on Fifth to Broadway, South on Broadway to First, West on Third to Vine, North on Vine to Fourth, East on Fourth to Central, North on Central to Avenue, East on Avenue to Liberty, West on Liberty to Vine, North on Vine to Fourth, West on Fourth to South on South to the Hall.

No battle-field, no steamboat explosion could exceed the horror of the scene! There, under that enormous mass of smoking ruins, thirty or forty men lay buried. The stupor of the cry that arose from the crowd was terrific. It was followed by a death-like silence; a breathless suspense of a minute; and some brave men—five or six firemen, whose names did not reach us, were rushed to the smoking pile, calling upon others to follow them. There were many strong arms and willing hearts, but the attempt was next to impossible—hundreds rushed forward, and the crowd was scorched and singed, so intense was the heat.

The half dozen brave prime movers, moved to the smoke task, did not seem to feel the heat, but went on until they were on the hot bricks and breaking the half charred timbers. They were followed by others, and as the great heat subsided, the crowd of working men increased. The first man to enter was Mike Sheehan, a member of No. 18. He was badly cut in the forehead. The brave fellow shook off the dust and ashes that covered his face, and first went to the rescue of the men who were buried. "There are others there!" With this he turned to help throwing out the bricks, but had to give up after awhile.

Every now and then the groans of the sufferers would reach our ears, and they were to be found. As the rubbish was cleared away, some spoke and told their names. Each new announcement was received with gladness, and gave new courage to the workmen.

(From the Wheeling Times and Gazette.)
It is a strange thing to many who have not seen it, that there is no doubt of the fact that the Prince of Wales will change his hair to the original color, and cause it to grow on heads of men and women. There was a time when persons who had lost their hair were compelled to wear a wig, but since the advent of Wood's Tonic, and the hair growing on the heads of men and women, it is no longer any secret that the hair grows on the heads of men and women, and is no longer any secret that the hair grows on the heads of men and women.
